DLG-awarded quality—several agaSAAT products have once again successfully passed the international quality test and received DLG GOLD awards

Our products have once again successfully passed the international quality test performed by DLG (German Agricultural Society) and have received three gold awards.

The DLG test is primarily centred around a sensory analysis of the products based on the following parameters:

- Appearance
- Smell
- Taste
- Consistency

A packaging and labelling test is also carried out.

The DLG award indicates to end consumers that they are buying a proven high-quality product and provides guidance when consumers are looking for and choosing foods with high sensory properties.

“We undergo this DLG test every year,” explains Werner Arts, founder and owner of agaSAAT GmbH. “Our many years of experience and continuously optimised, patented procedural steps during the manufacturing process form the basis for these new gold awards.”

We have earned our leading position through years of hard work and continued investments in the most modern processing technologies, certified according to the highest IFS standards, and we do not plan on deviating from this path in the future. In addition, the increasingly strict requirements and expansion of the analyses and general requirements placed on the agricultural products transformed into high-quality foods at the agaSAAT GmbH headquarters in Neukirchen-Vluyn, as well as the company’s internal quality policy, means that further investments will be made.

Even the company's second generation managers, Tobias-Werner Arts and Fabian Arts, have chosen to stick with this outlook for the continued existence of and investments in the company.

“Having a technical edge, extensive know-how and an open ear to the wishes and requirements of our customers,” this is how the sons of agaSAAT GmbH owner Werner Arts plan to ensure the continued commercial development of the company.
